The 18th of April is International Day of Sites and Monuments, sometimes mistakenly called “World Heritage Day”. It is also the start of the month-long Australian Heritage Festival. So what better evening than to hear about and debate the question posed?

The presenters late last year travelled to Europe to research a growing personal interest in mining heritage. Sites visited included world heritage sites, national heritage sites, tourist sites, mining museums, and local history groups. The highlight was time spent at Rio Tinto in Andalusia, Spain.

The presentation will discuss world heritage listings relating to mining and metallurgy and Australia’s evolving position. How we value our own heritage and present it to the public will influence our future acceptance by society.
